Vatican Secretariat Head, Pressed For Statement On Anti-Semitism, Cited Arabs As Obstacle

A statement condemning anti-Semitism was prepared for the Ecumenical Council in Rome last fall but never presented, according to a prominent Roman Catholic theologian. The idea was dropped, he said, because of concern that such a statement might be construed by the Arab states as presenting a pro-Israel attitude.

The theologian reporting on the statement was the Rev. Gustave Weigel, professor of ecclesiology at Woodstock College in Maryland and corresponding editor of the Jesuit weekly magazine, America, says the New York Times. He said he expected the statement to be avoided again when the Council reconvened, on September 29.

"Although this was a statement of moral principle," Father Weigel said, "they (the Arabs) would see in it a political intention."

The Jesuit's remarks were made during a question-and-answer period at a late night session of the annual conference of the National Community Relations Advisory Council at the Shelburne Hotel, in Atlantic City, N. J. He amplified his remarks in an interview with the New York Times, man, Irving Spiegel. The Council is the representative body of 69 local Jewish community councils of six major Jewish national civic and religious organizations.

Father Weigel disclosed that Zachariah Schuster, director of the European office of the American Jewish Committee, a human relations agency, was "anxious" for the issuance of such a statement by the Ecumenical Council. Mr. Schuster, he said, had discussed this possibility with Augustin Cardinal Bea, head of the Vatican Secretariat for promoting Christian unity.

A statement on anti-Semitism was also pressed by the World Conference of Jewish Organizations as well as by the World Jewish Congress. When Cardinal Bea visited the U.S. several months ago, leaders of the Synagogue Council of America, which represents the three rabbinical and congregational arms of Judaism, met with him in an informal discussion of the question of anti-Semitism.

Cardinal Bea, Father Weigel said, had manifested "goodwill in the entire matter" concerning a statement condemning anti-Semitism. However, Father Weigel said, obstacles arose over the issuance of the statement in the presence of Arab Bishops at the Ecumenical Council, and in concern over Christian minorities who lived in the Arab lands.

Father Weigel said the statement had been drafted by the Rev. Leo Rudloff, Abbott of two Benedictine Monasteries — one in Jerusalem, Israel, and the other in western Vermont; and by Msgr. John Oesterreicher, of Seton Hall College, in New Jersey.

The willingness of a majority of the 2,500 Bishops who were present to adopt such a statement was "obvious," the Jesuit reported. However, he said, "it was not introduced because the Arab states would understand it as backing up Israel and therefore chiding and rebuffing the Arab states," reports the New York Times. Father Weigel expressed his opinion that when the members of the Ecumenical Council reconvened on September 29, they would again "rather avoid the issue than face it."

Lewis Weinstein, of Boston, Mass., chairman of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, termed the concern over Arabs' attitude "inconsistent with the great moral basis upon which ecumenicity is founded."

Mr. Weinstein asserted that "even if the denial of a statement against anti-Semitism was deemed expedient, a conclusion which seems completely irrelevant and unrealistic, it is our hope that Father Weigel's tentative prediction will be contradicted by positive action from the Ecumenical Council."

Mr. Weinstein was re-elected chairman of the National Community Relations Advisory Council.

Reached by telephone, Rabbi Marc H. Tanenbaum, director of inter-religious affairs of the American Jewish Committee, cited the recent assertion by Cardinal Bea that the "greatest challenge to our generation is the problem of group antagonism, and it is the primordial duty of all groups of mankind to unite for the purpose of overcoming hatreds of the past."

Rabbi Tanenbaum expressed hope that the Catholic Bishops "will continue to advance the great ecumenical movement of increasing human understanding."

In 1959 Pope John XXIII ordered that a prayer referring to Jews as "perfidious" be modified to remove the adjective. The word appeared in one of eight collects sung during the Good Friday services.

ZIM LINES CHIEF SPEAKS UP IN CONTROVERSY OVER KOSHER AND NON-KOSHER ON NEW LINER

The Israeli trans-Atlantic liner Shalom, which was dedicated in a French shipyard by Mrs. David Ben-Gurion, is the center of a violent controversy over dietary regulations. All other Israeli passenger ships serve food in strict compliance with Jewish law but the Shalom (the name means peace) is being equipped to offer passengers a choice between kosher and non-kosher meals, says the New York Times. The term kosher designates food that is sanctioned under Jewish law as ritually clean.

The idea that a vessel flying a flag bearing the Star of David will serve non-kosher food has outraged a section of the population. Orthodox representatives in the Government have brought the question before the Cabinet.

There is a strong possibility that the Cabinet will order the builders, the Zim Israel Navigation Company Ltd., to eliminate the non-kosher kitchen. The Government has a majority interest in the vessel.

Official policy in Israel has been to refrain from interfering with what people eat in their homes or in privately owned restaurants. However, all state institutions observe the dietary laws.

Such procedure is considered necessary for maintaining national unity. Otherwise, the state would have to provide special military units and separate hospitals and prisons for citizens whose conscience prevents them from eating anything in violation of religious law.

The Israeli Rabbinate has served notice that if there are two kitchens aboard the Shalom, it will refuse to approve the kosher section. That would mean that observant Jews would boycott the ship. Yet non-Israeli ships with kosher sections have received approval.

The explanation is that rabbinical law prohibits Jews from serving non-kosher food to other Jews. On non-Israeli ships with non-Jewish waiters, that problem does not arise.

Zvi Herman, director of the Zim [illegible] do not want kosher food, reports the New York Times. On its ships in the Mediterranean, he said, the company has complied with religious dietary laws because voyages last only two or three days and passengers have been willing to put up with a limited cuisine.

Under the dietary prohibition against eating meat and poultry at the same time as milk products, Orthodox individuals have two sets of dishes and utensils so that there is no possibility of the contact of one kind of food with the other.

Mr. Herman contended that the Shalom, as a trans-Atlantic liner, would not be able to fill her 1,000 berths on luxury cruises if passengers could not get cream for their coffee after a meat meal, reports the New York Times. Rabbinical law prohibits the mixing of meat and dairy foods.

The controversy has reached the newspapers.

Max Cymbalista, chief cook of the Zim lines, said the tourist public wanted "tasty, juicy fillet steak, which can't be done with meat soaked and salted" as required by religious dietary laws.

A leading businessman, Herman Hollander, argued that if Zim defied the Rabbinate, Orthodox Jews would not travel aboard the Shalom and the liner would lose more trade than by having only a kosher kitchen.

He said that if luxury trans-Atlantic shipping could not be profitable under those conditions, Israel should not go in for it at all, but should concentrate on freight shipping.

Mrs. David Ben-Gurion formally dedicated the 24,000-ton luxury liner Shalom at St. Nazaire, France. On her second attempt, the wife of the former Israeli Premier shattered a bottle of champagne against the hull of the ship that will carry 1,100 passengers between New York and Israel, starting early next year.

Australia To Welcome Camp Refugees, And Handicapped

The last of the refugees still living in camps in Europe would soon be moving out to their new homes, Dr. Felix Schnyder, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, said at the annual citizenship convention at Canberra. The primary objective of World Refugee Year, 1959, had therefore been achieved. But, he added, much remained to be done in meeting the overall refugee problem.

Dr. Schnyder said that Dr. Jensen, an Australian general practitioner with long experience in emigration medical techniques, had, for example, recently made a survey of all severely handicapped refugees in Europe wishing to emigrate, says the London Times. He had suggested ways in which the barriers which had prevented their reception overseas might be overcome. They and their families numbered about 850 people, and already more than 300 had been found homes beyond Europe.

"Many refugees whose plight seemed hopeless are now on the road to successful resettlement and we are confident that as these 'Jensen dossiers', as we have come to call them, are circulated among the various Governments interested in this problem an even greater number of refugees in this residual group will have the chance for which they have waited so long", he said.

He thanked Mr. Downer, Australian Minister for Immigration, for promising to consider some of these cases immediately. He said that Australia had welcomed 300,000 refugees since the end of the war — more, proportionately, than any other country.

Delegates to convention were particularly moved by Odd Nansen, son of Fridtjof Nansen, the explorer, and first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. Mr. Nansen, who eloquently pleaded the cause of the world's refugees, is a member of the committee which awarded the 1962 medal named after his father to Sir Tasman Heyes, secretary of the Australian Department of Immigration from its inception in 1946 until 1961.

The convention was opened by Sir Robert Mensies, the Australian Prime Minister, who said that a quarter of all Australians under 21 had either come out to Australia with immigrating parents or had been born in Australia to immigrant parents.

Arthur Calwell, Leader of the Opposition and Australia's first Minister for Immigration, supported the Prime Minister, stating that Australia's postwar immigration programme will have attracted two million people by the end of this year.

Mr. Downer said that some of the two million mentioned by Mr. Calwell were Australians returning home, but the bulk were new settlers, 63 per cent of whom had remained. In the financial year 1962-63, the planned intake of 125,000 would probably be exceeded by 10,000. About 42,000 British immigrants would by then have arrived on assisted passages, the greatest number for more than a decade. In the first five months of 1963 more than 127,000 British people had applied to come to Australia, says the London Times. In 1963-64 the British intake would certainly be more than it had been this year.

Ben-Gurion's Decision To Retire As Premier Could Change In National Crisis, He Says

Former Premier David Ben-Gurion indicated to W. Granger Blair, of the New York Times, at Tel Aviv, that he hoped his retirement from active political leadership of Israel could be permanent. Several times during the interview in his home Mr. Ben-Gurion exclaimed with a broad smile and great gusto: "Now I am a free man."

However, the man who had led the nation for almost the entire 15 years of its existence, declined to state that his decision to retire was irrevocable.

"If there is a crisis everything can change," Mr. Ben-Gurion said. "In case of a national crisis my personal wishes could be subjected to the national need." Having thus left the impression that he could be called again into service, the former Premier quickly added: "But I want to remain a free man."

The interview took place in the library, lined with thousands of historical, political, biblical, and philosophical tomes, on the second floor of his unpretentious home. Ushering his visitor from the ground floor up to his library, the 76-year-old former Premier belied his age by skipping youthfully up the stairs.

The Israeli statesman discoursed in a relaxed and mellowed fashion on his retirement, his future plans, and the problems of Israel. He seemed to be thoroughly enjoying his new freedom from the burdens of state.

Mr. Ben-Gurion said he had full confidence in the new government of Premier Levi Eshkol. He emphasized the point again later in the interview with the remark: "I trust the people in the government." The new government is based, as have been all Israeli governments, on a coalition that is composed of virtually the same ministers. Some of them have changed the posts they held under Mr. Ben-Gurion.

The former Premier said he had wanted to retire after the 15th anniversary of Israel's independence last April, but had put off the move because of foreign policy problems, says the New York Times. This was an allusion to the disclosure of the German rocket experts in the United Arab Republic, unrest in the Middle East, particularly Jordan, and the proposed federation adding Syria and Iraq to the U.A.R.

"Now things are more or less in order; there is peace more or less; there are no major foreign or domestic problems," Mr. Ben-Gurion said. "There was a group of people that I had full confidence

GOLDBERG IS THE NAME

When Arthur J. Goldberg left the knockabout life of Labor Secretary last October to become Mr. Justice Goldberg, he said good-by forever to the crisis business. No more all-night wrangling in smoke-filled hotel rooms for him, no more cross-country flights to head off strikes, writes Charles Portis, in the New York Herald Tribune. But when President Kennedy looked about for some one to make a last-minute save in the rail crisis, there was simply no one else to tap but Arthur J. Goldberg.

Just three months ago, Justice Goldberg told the press he would never again "occupy any role" in labor affairs, nor would he be a "busybody" on the public scene. The feelings were well-known to the President, and it is a measure of the situation that he went ahead and asked Mr. Goldberg to take on this disagreeable job.

Mr. Goldberg established himself as the country's all-time champion mediator in twenty months of furious activity as Secretary of Labor. On the day he took office he dashed to New York to stop a tug-boat strike. And he stayed on the go until he left office, rushing about the country cooling off tempers, applying pressure where needed and averting strikes.

One of his less important but perhaps most famous coups was in the Metropolitan Opera squabble of 1961. He stepped into the middle of an ugly stand-off between Local 802 and the opera management, rapped their heads a little, and saved the 1961-'62 opera season.

A Chicago boy, the eighth child of poor Russian immigrants, Mr. Goldberg worked his way through Northwestern University and won his law degree summa cum laude at the age of twenty.

After a few years in real-estate practice, he got his start in labor law when he took the CIO's American Newspaper Guild as a client in a strike against the Chicago Herald-Examiner in 1938, says the New York Herald Tribune. He helped to bring about a settlement with a minimum of unpleasantness, and his labor career was under way.

After World War II — he served as a major in Army Intelligence — he returned to Chicago and resumed work for his CIO clients. In 1948 Philip Murray picked him as a compromise choice for general counsel of the CIO and the United Steelworkers of America.

He was a dynamo at the job, and within ten years he was generally regarded as the leading labor lawyer in the U.S. He was a prime mover in the 1955 merger of the AFL and CIO, and two years later he played a major role in the expulsion of the Teamsters Union from the AFL-CIO.

In 1959 he found himself and his Steelworkers bogged down in a hopeless strike. After 116 days, the Taft-Hartley law was invoked to stop it for a cooling-off period. Mr. Goldberg fought it all the way to the Supreme Court — and lost — but the Justices told him his argument was the most brilliant one they had heard that term.

It was during that period that he struck up a friendship with Sen. John F. Kennedy, who was wary of being a labor specialist himself. One of the first to join [illegible] and a hard worker in the campaign, Mr. Goldberg was Mr. Kennedy's first choice for Labor Secretary.

He would have preferred a legal post, even a sub-cabinet one such as Solicitor General, but he told the President he would be agreeable to any assignment. Not quite two years later, after setting a new activist style for Labor Secretaries, he got his legal post. Justice Felix Frankfurter resigned from the Supreme Court because of ill health and President Kennedy replaced him on the bench post-haste with Mr. Goldberg.

Mr. Goldberg got the good news by telephone, and accepted, just forty minutes before the appointment was publicly announced. He was out of town, of course — Chicago at that time —trying to settle a strike. It was a railroad strike.

BEN-GURION'S DECISION TO RETIRE COULD CHANGE IN CRISIS

in who could do the job, so I could step down."

The former Premier declined to elaborate on the personal reasons behind his resignation June 16, which came as a stunning surprise to a nation that had almost come to consider him indispensable.

His associates had indicated that one of the principal reasons for his decision was his weariness with the frustration of trying to cope with coalition politics while running the nation.

This seemed borne out by Mr. Ben-Gurion's matter-of-fact observation that much of what he had tried to do had been impeded by his dependence on a coalition to rule. The former Premier gave as one example his unsuccessful efforts to develop an educational program embracing both religious and secular elements.

Mr. Ben-Gurion indicated that he would continue to work to close the educational gap between the European and Orient Jewish communities and to promote unity among the three Israeli labor parties — Mapai, Ahdut Havoda, and Mapam.

The former Premier said the major problems facing his successors would be Security, education and settling the Negev Desert.

Real peace in the Middle East and elsewhere, he said, can come about only when the United States and the Soviet Union stop talking about peace and get together to work for it, says the New York Times. He said that a great impulse for peace would result from the establishment of friendly relations between the United States and Communist China, which the former Premier predicted would become the world's greatest power in 20 years.

ZIM LINES CHIEF SPEAKS UP

Three plane loads of shipping and industrial officials were flown from Paris for the ceremony at this Atlantic port. France's most famous liners, the Normandy, and the France, were also built at St. Nazaire.

The Shalom will become the flagship of an Israeli fleet of six passenger liners and 42 tankers and cargo ships. The Shalom will have ten decks, three swimming pools, two theaters, two dining rooms, television-equipped bars, a tennis court, gymnasium, synagogue, and chapel, says the New York Times. It will carry a crew of more than 600.

JEWISH LABOR COMMITTEE APPOINTS NEW TOP OFFICERS

The Jewish Labor Committee announced the appointment of New officers, Benjamin Tabachinsky, executive secretary; and Emanuel Muravchik, national director, made at a meeting in New York of the National Administrative Committee, and announced by Adolph Held, national chairman.

Mr. Tabachinsky for many years has been in charge of the national campaigns of the Jewish Labor Committee and has shared in the leadership of all aspects of the work of the Committee. Mr. Muravchik has been in charge of the work against anti-Semitism and discrimination in the capacity of national field director and secretary of the J.L.C. National Trade Union Council for Human Rights. Their appointments followed the resignation as executive secretary of Jacob Pat, longtime director, who resigned for reasons of health, to be secretary emeritus.

The Jewish Labor Committee serves as the link between the Jewish community and the trade union movement. It has a total affiliated membership of over 500,000 consisting of the Jewish members of various AFL-CIO unions, including the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, United Hebrew Trades, Workmen's Circle, the Jewish Daily Forward Association, and the Congress for Jewish Culture.

Mr. Tabachinsky, was born in Bialystok, Poland (then part of Czarist Russia), and got his education there. He was a pioneer of the Yiddish school movement in Poland and a member of the Central Yiddish School organization. In 1932 he travelled throughout Latin America as a delegate of the Yiddish cultural and school movement. In his home city of Bialystok he was a member of the administration of the Kehilla (Jewish Community), representing the Jewish Labor Bund, an Alderman, and was designated by the city as a judge of labor disputes. He was a writer for the Jewish press in Poland and later in the United States.

Mr. Tabachinsky first came to the United States in 1939 on a lecture tour for the World ORT. In 1939 he came again as a member of a delegation of Jewish labor leaders. The outbreak of the war prevented his return to Poland and he was engaged by the Jewish Labor Committee as national campaign director. In this capacity he represented the J.L.C. in the community welfare funds, in the trade unions, and as a frequent lecturer at meetings throughout America.

While still in Europe, Mr. Tabachinsky was a member of the administrative board of ORT and of TOZ, the central Jewish medical organization for children. In 1947, he was sent to post-war Europe by the Jewish Labor Committee to survey and bring back a first hand report of conditions in the DP camps. The Federation of Jewish Philanthropies awarded him a plaque in 1957 for his decades of service to the Jewish community of America.

Mr. Tabachinsky's first wife perished in the Treblinka concentration camp. His seventeen-year-old son was shot by the Germans in 1941.

The new national director of the Jewish Labor Committee, Emanuel Muravchik, was born and raised in New York. He is a graduate of Columbia University and took post-graduate work at the New School for Social Research. Mr. Muravchik served on the organizing staff of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union in the early forties and later did educational work for the United Automobile Workers Union. He served in the United States Army during the second World War.

Upon his return to civilian life at the end of the war, Mr. Muravchik became executive secretary of the Veterans' League of America, a liberal ex-servicemen's organization which later merged with the American Veterans Committee. In 1947 he became National Organization Secretary of the Socialist Party, a post he held for one year until his appointment as national field director of the Jewish Labor Committee.

For the past fourteen years Mr. Muravchik has been in charge of the anti-discrimination work which the J.L.C. conducts with the organized labor movement in the United States. He has made a special study of the problem of Soviet anti-Semitism and brought this issue to the recent world meeting of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. As a result, the ICFTU took the initiative in raising the question at the United Nations.

Mr. Muravchik is the author of "Unions And Minority Discrimination" in "House of Labor", edited by Hardman and Neufeld. The new national director of the J.L.C. is a member of the executive committee of the National Community Relations Advisory Committee, the coordinating body of Jewish civil rights agencies. He is also a member of the national boards of the League for Industrial Democracy, the Association of Jewish Community Relations Workers, the Workers Defense League, the National Sharecroppers Fund, and the National Religion and Labor Council.

He was recently appointed by U.S. Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz to the Labor Department's Advisory Committee on Equal Opportunity in Apprenticeship and Training. Mr. Muravchik is married and has two children.

White And Negro Temple Members Can Now Swim Together Again

White and Negro members of Temple Shomrei Emunah, at Montclair, New Jersey, can now swim together at a nearby swimming club from which the congregation withdrew when its Negro members were denied pool facilities. The club management informed the synagogue's board of directors that it was desegregating its pool "commencing immediately." The board was meeting to consider further action on a complaint being filed with the New Jersey Division of Civil Rights.

Ten days earlier, a party of Temple adults and children, including a Negro member family as well as an invited, non-Jewish Negro family, went to the club to hold their religious school's scheduled outing. The Negroes were denied swimming facilities, despite the appeal of Rabbi Joshua Schnitzer. The party then left in a body and held the outing in the yard of a member's home. The Temple's action received backing from the United Synagogue of America, with which it is affiliated. The United Synagogue, the association of 763 Conservative synagogues in the U.S. and Canada, praised the Temple for its "truly Jewish and American position which was an eloquent reflection of the teachings of the Torah, the philosophy of the Conservative Movement, and the standards of the United Synagogue."

The club's letter to the Temple announcing its desegregation asked for the Temple's "forgiveness for this unfortunate occurrence." It said: "It is our purpose and intent, commencing immediately, that our club shall be operated in a manner wherein no discrimination will be shown to any group or individual because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry."

The Temple's president, Dr. Martin Lowenthal, assured the board of directors that discussions held with the club's management left him confident that the letter had been written in "complete good faith." Rabbi Schnitzer, discussing the letter at the board meeting, based his remarks on a biblical text. The passage he chose came from Leviticus XIX, 18:

"You shall not take vengeance or bear a grudge against your kinsfolk. Love your neighbor as yourself."

CONGRESS SUGGESTION OF SIMPLER PROCEDURE FOR CHANGE OF NAME GETS SUPPORT

The Canadian Jewish Congress, of which Michael Garber, Q.C., is president, made a supplementary submission to the Hon. Andre Nadeau, Q.C., Commissioner on the Revision of the Civil Code in Quebec, concerning an earlier proposal for an amendment to Article 56a of the Civil Code (Change of Names), to draw to the attention of the Commissioner a judgment rendered recently by a Court composed of three magistrates in a case involving a change of name. In this case the petitioner took proceedings to annul the election of the respondent as a municipal councillor on the basis that his name, according to his birth certificate, was different from the one under which he ran for office, which, however he has been using for fourteen years.

The court maintained the petition and annulled the election of the respondent on the basis of provisions of the Cities and Towns Act. In the judgment, the Court discussed the implications of article 56a of the Civil Code in an attempt to restrict its application and emphasized that article 56a is contrary to the normal principles of the civil law and that a literal interpretation of the article would invalidate many civil contracts of all kinds.

The Congress submitted that this judgment supports its thesis and that a simpler procedure for change of name should be enacted forthwith and that the law should be clarified so that the only sanction for the use of a name other than a person's legal name would be a penal sanction, and not the nullity of civil acts.

In reply to the supplementary submission Congress was advised that the office of the Revision of the Civil Code proposes to suggest an amendment to article 56a dealing with Change of Names at the coming session of the Quebec Legislature.
